

Notice to Subscribers and Users

We have decided to terminate production of PIL this year (2016) and make 41/2 the final printed issue. This decision has not been taken lightly. Termination of this publication means breaking with a long tradition. Nevertheless, the writing has been on the wall for some time. The usefulness of the publication has inevitably become diminished as a result of the cost-free, online availability of the data it contains.

It has always been the intention of the Institute's directors to have the MPIL lead the way and be situated at the forefront of scholarly endeavors in the field of public international law. In practical terms, this means applying the Institute's resources to projects more in tune with current technical possibilities and the needs of a new generation of scholarly researchers and other interested parties. For an overview of the MPIL's present publications, including those which are freely accessible for downloading, as well as links to bibliographical information on articles, which continue to be classified according to the familiar scheme used for PIL, see <http://www.mpil.de/en/pub/news/publications.cfm> and <http://www.mpil.de/en/pub/library/research-tools/documentation-of-articles/public-international-law.cfm>, respectively.

We wish to express our sincere and lasting appreciation for the support, cooperation and commitment that we have received from Springer-Verlag as well as for the interest and loyalty of PIL subscribers and users over the long life-span of this publication.
